Lake course :

The Opening hole looks relatively flat and easy. But whatever you do, stay away from the right side of the fairway because a lake starts where the white tee box is and runs all the way past the green.

The fairway turns 70 degrees right and around the edge of the pond, threatening you all the way to the green. A bunker sits on the left of the fairway exactly where the turn is, 150 yards from the green.

All you have to do is to find the centre of the fairway. The green is elevated and offers a 10 metre gap for you to aim through. Two huge bunkers guard the front left, another guards the back while the pond protects the right side of the green. A stiff slope runs all the way into the pond, threatening a watery grave.

Mountain Course :

This is another opening hole that looks fairly easy, possibly because it is flat. However, pay closer attention because the fairway is only about 30 metres wide. A line of trees runs along the right while a bunker is sited 210 metres from the tee on the left beyond which the hole turns right.

The approach shot gets even narrower as there is a large mound on the left of the green complex. Trees jut out towards the middle of the fairway, blocking the right-side approach to the green. Another lone, dead tree sits in the middle of the fairway 100 metres from the green. On both sides of the green complex are two huge, oddly shaped bunkers, again making it tough for the weaker players.
